The funding also supported the development of a workforce deployment tool for African countries to use in deploying health workers for HIV treatment and prevention. TEPHINET provided services to the US public health system through cooperative agreements with the CDC. This federal funding supported primarily the development of field epidemiology training programs (FETPs) and graduates around the world to prevent, detect and respond to public health threats such as outbreaks and natural disasters and to tackle challenging issues in chronic disease. Description specifically, further development of a regional network of FETPs there, as well as HIV and influenza surveillance in Central America. The other agreement had a more global focus and supported several field epidemiology projects utilizing residents and graduates of programs to evaluate surveillance systems, analyze public health data and provide recommendations to senior public health officials, investigate outbreaks, develop preventive interventions, and conduct basic scientific studies. TEPHINET also collaborated with the CDC on a key quality improvement project to start accrediting FETPs in the coming year. Three programs are currently involved in this initiative at this point in time. At the end of the year TEPHINET also completed an assessment of its learning needs and will be starting the development of an expanded learning management system and community practice network African Health Workforce Project: Countries worldwide are challenged by health worker shortages and an imbalance of skilled health professionals. Often there is an abundance of skilled workers in some regions while other communities are lacking. Regulatory agencies, charged with ensuring the quality of the education and skills of the healthcare professionals, are often underfunded and lack basic resources such as information systems, frameworks for continuous professional education and IT infrastructure. Healthcare managers need adequate information about the supply and demand for healthcare workers to manage their workforce more efficiently, plan for scale up of the workforce, ensure proper regulation of professionals, and to develop effective human resource policies. However, many countries lack computerized data systems that can provide these critical data. The African Health Workforce Project is designed to address these issues by assisting health professional regulatory agencies in development of human resource information systems, improvement of IT infrastructure, and collaborative forums to assist them in strengthening regulatory functions to improve professional standards in the east, central, and southern regions of Africa.

Second Program Service Accomplishments DescriptionDescription

intestinal worms. ITI has established a unique competitive advantage within the global trachoma community based on its singular focus on trachoma, its credibility as a neutral convener and trusted ally, its flexibility and ability to lead initiatives in support of scale-up, and its role as the sole steward of Pfizer, Inc.'s Zithromax(R) drug donation. ITI fulfills three value-adding roles that contribute to the implementation of the WHO-endorsed SAFE strategy (Surgery, Antibiotic treatment, Facial cleanliness, Environmental improvement), namely: 1) stewardship of the Zithromax(R) drug donation; 2) program delivery strengthening, through operational research, knowledge sharing, capacity building and technical backstopping; and 3) partnership development, through support to the International Coalition for Trachoma Control (ICTC), spearheading WASH/NTD engagement, and mobilizing resources for trachoma. NTD-SC serves as the recipient and coordinator of a Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation grant entitled "Filling the Gaps - Operational Research to Ensure the Success of the Neglected Tropical Disease Control and Elimination Programs" and a new USAID grant, titled "Coalition for Operational Research on Neglected Tropical Diseases COR-NTD". These grants enable the NTD-SC to collaborate with the NTD community in addressing priority research needs for the NTDs, which threaten the lives and well-being of millions of people in some of the world's poorest communities. Through a highly collaborative project structure, NTD researchers have a forum to identify needs, work together, and make the technical advances needed to maximize the impact of programs targeting NTDs. Established 28 years ago, the MDP is the longest-running, disease-specific, drug donation program and public/private partnership of its kind. The MDP secretariat is a partner of the Task Force for Global Health, and was established to provide medical, technical and administrative oversight of the donation of the anti-parasitic medication Mectizan for river blindness (onchocerciasis) control. In 1998, Merck expanded the mandate of the program to include lymphatic filariasis elimination in Africa and in Yemen where the two diseases are co-endemic through the co-administration of Mectizan and albendazole, an anti-parasitic donated by GlaxoSmithKline. In 2014, MDP provided an estimated 256,599,065 Mectizan and/or albendazole treatments to onchocerciasis and lymphatic filariasis endemic countries in Africa, Latin America, and Yemen.
